Below is an excerpt from CQ Researcher . Read the passage and answer the following questions.
Mantel, Barbara. "Future of Libraries." CQ Researcher 29 July 2011: 625-52. Web. 15 Aug. 2011.
A rising number of people are asking librarians for help with job searches, résumé writing and applications for unemployment benefits, Caplan says. People who can no longer afford to buy or rent DVDs or purchase books are now borrowing them from the library. Parents who used to take their kids to the movies are bringing them to free library programs instead. But many politicians, Caplan says, just don't understand how "people depend on us more than ever."
Chris Hoene, director of research at the National League of Cities, which advocates in behalf of municipal leaders, disagrees. "I think it is increasingly recognized that libraries are workforce centers, provide afterschool care and are quasi-community centers, but the reality also is that the declines in local revenues are deep," says Hoene, "and it may be another year or two before we see the curve change." Cities rely heavily on revenue from property taxes; a little more than half also have a local sales tax, and about 13 percent of cities have a local income tax, says Hoene. All three sources have been hit hard.
What do you do?
1. If you copied and pasted this sentence into your document: People who can no longer afford to buy or rent DVDs or purchase books are now borrowing them from the library. Should you or should you not put quotes around it? Should you or should you not include a parenthetical notation and include a citation for the whole article in your Works Cited page?
OR would you copy the statement and not cite it?
2. If you state that "about 13 percent of cities have a local income tax" who do you give the credit to saying it?
Choose the best answer:
A. I will just slide that number in without documentation. It will take too long to include the documentation.
B. I include the figure and cite it came from CQ Researcher, and list the URL as the source.
C. I copy and paste the quote, and include a statement that it came from Chris Hoene, the director of research at the National League of Cities as saying it, and document it from CQ Researcher , with Barbara Mantel as the author of the CQ Researcher article.
